

Learning and teaching is one of the most important aspects of university life.

The inaugural Festival of Teaching & Learning brings together academic and professional staff from across the University, as well as students and external stakeholders to “engage, discuss and co-create”.

The program for each day will include keynote addresses, interactive workshops, open forums and showcases of the latest thinking on the educational experience.

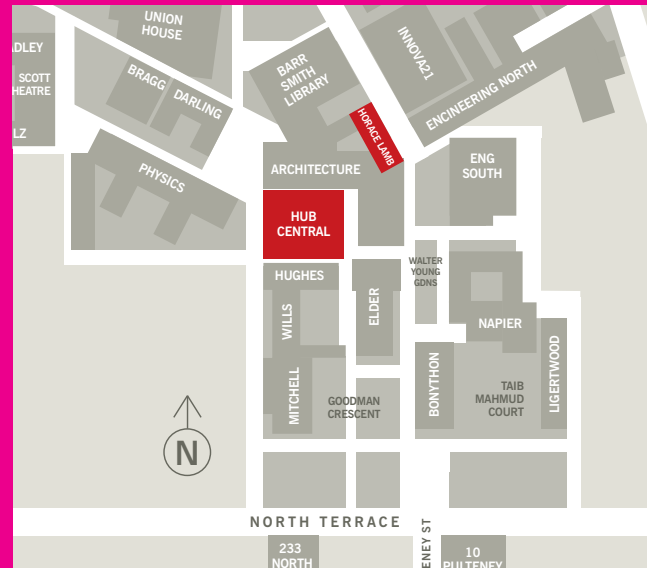

How can we engage with and get the most from students? How can we deliver meaningful outcomes that will be relevant to our graduates throughout their lives?

My hope is that this festival will produce lively and spirited discussion; we should be passionately debating the future of learning and teaching. I encourage you to take part and have your say—this is your opportunity to spark momentum around new approaches to teaching and learning and shape your future.

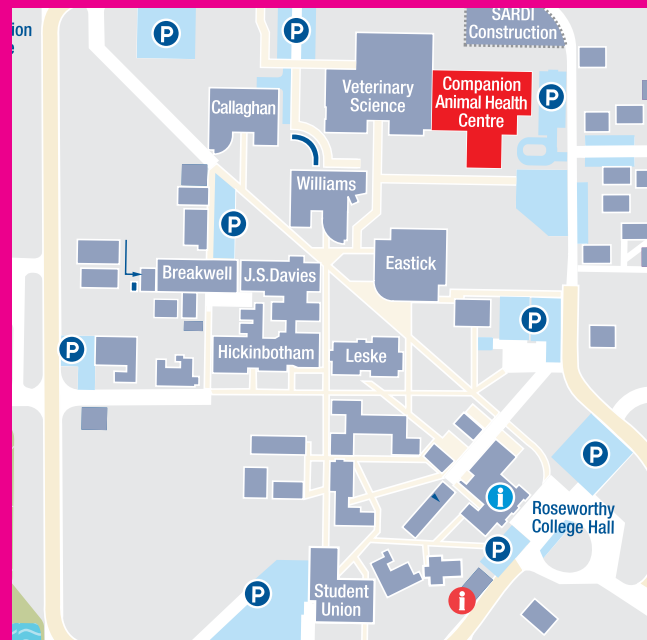

Professor Pascale Quester
Deputy Vice-Chancellor and Vice-President (Academic)
