DIGITAL COPYRIGHT

The use of digital technology has brought about significant changes in learning and teaching in the University and the copyright conditions that apply.

This article seeks to highlight the following:

1. to remind all staff and students of their legal obligation to comply with copyright laws and associated agreements and with University policies on copyright. See: <http://www.adelaide.edu.au/copyright>. If you have any queries on copyright contact copyright@adelaide.edu.au. If you have queries regarding IT policies contact helpdesk@adelaide.edu.au.
2. to bring to your attention the service offered by the Digital Resources Management Centre (DRMC), Barr Smith Library who will, without charge, scan and provide URLs for copyright materials for teaching purposes. See <http://www.library.adelaide.edu.au/ual/serv/digitisation/>.
3. to bring to your attention the related issue of licensed resources. Subscription databases and e-journals provided by the Library from publishers such as Elsevier, Wiley, Blackwell etc – are not directly covered by copyright legislation or related agreements, but by the terms and conditions of the licences signed by the Library with the publishers. Thus, with few exceptions, licensed material, such as journal articles, cannot be loaded onto local servers, cannot be copied for inclusion in printed course readers, and cannot be downloaded beyond the "fair use" limits described in the Copyright Act. In particular, publishers monitor 'systematic downloading' – the copying by individuals of, for example, all articles in a journal issue, or all issues in a volume. They will suspend access until offenders are identified and may, if non compliance persists, withdraw all access to the University.

The Library will seek to provide more specific information over the next 12-18 months on licence conditions for each resource as this information is built into the Library Catalogue. If you have any queries regarding licensed library resources please contact help.library@list.adelaide.edu.au.
