The Law School has a number of major research strengths in the areas of legal theory and history, corporate and commercial law, legal procedure and evidence, public law and the common law.

The School has a proud history of accomplishments in obtaining major competitive grants and international publications in these fields, both in respect of pure and applied research.

Individual and collaborative research by the Law School academic staff is enhanced by the Law School's full year Seminar Series, which brings to Adelaide a wide variety of distinguished visiting scholars from Australia and overseas.

The School publishes the Adelaide Law Review, which is designed to complement its research interests.
