Roseworthy Campus

Roseworthy Campus was established in 1883 as Roseworthy Agricultural College, Australia's first agricultural teaching and research centre. In 1991 a merger with Adelaide University links Roseworthy through the School of Agricultural Food and Wine to the Waite Campus.

Roseworthy Campus is established on 1500 ha of farmland located 50 kilometres north of Adelaide, and is well known for its world class teaching of agricultural technology, farming systems, animal production and natural resource management.

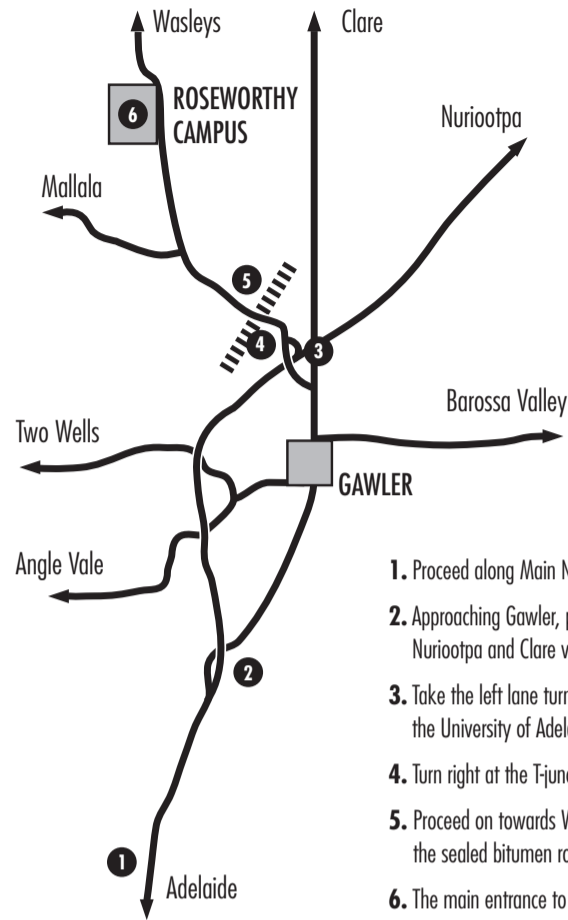

Adelaide University, in conjunction with Government and industry partners, has developed a strategic vision for a centre of excellence in dryland agricultural and animal production resulting in Roseworthy's modern facilities being shared with Primary Industries SA (PIRSA), South Australian Research and Development Institute (SARDI) and the Pig and Poultry Production Institute (PPPI). Adelaide University is working collaboratively also with TAFE (SA) across a range of subjects and courses.

The Roseworthy Residential College provides accommodation for undergraduate and postgraduate students and staff. The Campus is an excellent self-contained venue for conferences with accommodation requirements.
