All coursework students are advised that the Academic Progress by Coursework Students Policy has been updated.

You are considered ‘at risk’ if you do not pass more than 50% of the units you were enrolled in during a review period, or fail the same course for a second or subsequent time. (No change).

There are some changes that may affect you so it is important that you familiarise yourself with the updated policy.

The changes became effective on 8 June 2017.

Here are some of the important changes you may need to know:

- The risk status for all students is now calculated after the results for Replacement Exams are published.

- If you receive an Intention to Exclude Notice and are allowed to re-enrol after ‘showing cause’ as to why you should be permitted to remain enrolled in your program:

  ➢ you will be required to make satisfactory progress in the next Review Period in which you enrol (i.e. pass at least 50% of the units in which you enrol), rather than the current requirement of passing all courses in which you are enrolled.

  ➢ your Executive Dean will place conditions on your re-enrolment. Previously if you did not meet these conditions, it would lead to your automatic exclusion from your University program. Now, the Executive Dean may allow you to ‘show cause’ again if they determine that you have extraordinary circumstances (e.g. you only have one course left to complete your program).

- If you are re-admitted to the University after being previously excluded, you will be given a status of Risk 2 if you go into the same or similar program (or Risk 1 if in MBBS, BDS or BOH programs). If you were excluded more than 5 years ago you will be given a status of New.

Please refer to the full Academic Progress by Coursework Students Policy for further information.

Questions regarding the revised policy can be directed to Student Affairs.